No gold balloons left to purchase at the elementary school fair - but Barry wanted a gold balloon. Matt looks around him - like MacGyver - and within a few seconds he has daisy chained three of the available colors that could be purchased together - with a small piece of masking tape (from the tablecloth on one of the tables in the eating area) rolled into a circle (sticky side out) on the top balloon. Matt then proceeds to start pulling down balloons from the ceiling using his newly created "tool" - a gold one for Barry first. This caught everyone's attention and children start running up to him asking for the balloons that they lost earlier. He stood there smiling and fetching down balloons as long as there were children asking for them and balloons left to fetch. He was so loving and so loved by so many people and he is missed every single day.

Uncle Matt, we as kids would come out each summer to spend weeks with him and Dee and we had some crazy summer adventures. Matt always invented a new way to have fun! Never dull and always created so much laughter and was a joy to be around. He will be missed.
